The Trust's aims are to establish and manage nature reserves and advise planners, landowners and the public on matters relating to wildlife. The Trust organises and conducts conservation projects and surveys, and promotes the active biodiversity plan.

Improving habitats for wildlife promotes biodiversity. For example, piles of dead wood created when managing woodlands are left as habitats for different species.

The Trust welcomes volunteers who wish to help with their work, and there are a number of opportunities for them to contribute towards the management of the reserves in its care.

The body is financed by the agreements for each managed reserve, and it also receives grants. Local services and goods are used whenever possible.

The reserves are used to raise the awareness of visiting local schoolchildren, and there are opportunities also for the public to learn about and enjoy local wildlife.
