This conservation group was established to protect bats and their roost sites and to discover more about the bat population in Gwynedd.

It is a voluntary organisation which encourages people from the community to take part in various projects such as bat counts. The group is also very active in education, and gives talks to community groups and schools. It also has stalls at local events to raise awareness of bats and their habits and needs, and of ways in which local people can help to ensure a safe environment for them.

As a registered charity, income is derived from a membership fee, although the group has obtained grant money to employ people on short-term projects. There are also several new ventures for which funding will be sought in the near future. It is possible that other species of these unique animals may be discovered within the county.

The future aim of the group is to increase knowledge of these mammals in Gwynedd and encourage a greater understanding of their status within the community.

Status of group: Registered charity
Area: Gwynedd
