CPRW is a conservation organisation that includes both the human and natural environments within its area of activity. It recognises that change and continuity are the corner-stones of rural life and it is the search for a balance between these that forms the basis of CPRW's work.

It's aims are to help the conservation and enhancement of the landscape, environment and amenities of the countryside, towns and villages of rural Wales, while recognising the importance of its community and indigenous culture. It also provides advice and information on matters affecting the protection, conservation and improvement of our visual environment.

CPRW works in conjunction with its local branches, with local councils and environmental organisations to ensure that suitable measures are taken to protect landscapes. This includes supporting appropriate renewable energy schemes and encouraging sustainable development initiatives.

It is primarily a voluntary organisation, and strongly encourages its members to get involved with day to day projects and issues.

Tips for others: Partnership working can be extremely beneficial to all concerned. It is vital to establish an appropriate management protocol from the outset.

Desired help: The continued involvement of CPRW members and local communities, to provide two way information that enables the organisation to operate at all levels

Status of organisation: Registered charity

Area: Wales
