Sustainability can often seem bewildering both to understand and implement. The aim of Cyberium is to assist in the communication of sustainable development issues and concepts.

As a private partnership it has the skills to interpret complex information in an imaginative and engaging way. Clients include government departments, county councils, local charities, local businesses and the public.

Materials are produced in print, on the web (accessible web sites) or as presentations. Cyberium has produced interactive tools, CD-ROMs, environmental journalism, comics, brochures, books, games and web sites.

“Based at Corris, Powys, we try to source locally, spend locally, employ locally and bring money into the area from outside customers. We have a complete environmental policy, which includes sourcing renewable energy and effective waste management. The organisation believes in environmental education, supports many local projects such as Ecodyfi, Sustainable Gwynedd Gynladwy and Corris Working Group, and produces bilingual materials.”

Future aim: To assist as many groups as possible.

Tips for others: Plan and design to maximum effectiveness before starting work, and think about how to maximise appeal and accessibility to include as many sectors as possible no matter what their level of ability – and reach out proactively to those who do not ‘think sustainably’.

Status of organisation: Partnership
